

My hometown is Hai Phong city, which is a beautiful coastal city in north of VietNam. The city has a rich history and is an important port, contributing to its fast development. What makes Hai Phong stand out is its combination of natural beauty and urban growth. People here are very friendly and hospitable. I can enjoy peaceful moments by the sea or explore the bustling streets filled with shops, cafes and local markets. One of the most popular dishes is Bánh đa cua – a flavorful crab noodle soup that's unique to the city. Hai Phong also has a rich street food culture, with vendors selling delicious snacks like nem cua bể (crab spring rolls) and bánh mì que (crispy baguette sticks). For me, Hai Phong isn't just a place to live, it's where I feel connected to nature, tradition and modern life all at once. This special balance is what I love the most about my hometown, where I was born and raised.
